Misanthropes scoff at friendship's truth, And hate the very name of love; Not e'en the tender bonds of youth,

Can their unfeeling natures move. Not so with thee, whose early spring Of life has had no sombre cloud, That could its gloomy shadows bring, To make thy bosom cold and proud.

Ah no! affection, artless, pure. Still binds thy heart to other hearts, And may thy bosom never know The pangs misfortune's blast imports.

How cold, how dreary would be earth Without Love's gentle guiding start Which gladdens heart, and home and hearth,

And leads us to those realms afar. Oh! may thy life be ever blest With friends congenial, true and kind, To sooth each sorrow of thy breast, And calm each trouble of thy mind. Salem, Fauquier, Va.

A CHILD IN COURT .- On Thursday the Judge of Probate in Cincinnati, decided that one Sylvester Gaffney was entitled to the custody of Mary Ann Butler, his stepdaughter, seven years of age. This caused considerable emotion, and Gaffney showing a disposition to assert the right the Court had declared in his behalf, several persons gathered around. Mr. Nicholas Longworth, the Truth is Always Best, or "a fault confessed is wine king, in an excited manner, said, "let the mob interfere!" but the first man who attempted it was instantly taken hold of by the officers present and thrown out of the room. Mrs. Weightman, with whom The Bible Hour, or Scripture Lessons for the the child had been living, overcome by the excitement of the entire proceedings, fainted. The little child wept bitterly, and clung to the friends that had adopted it. Many of the women wrung their hands, and declared it would be ruined if it left them. The whole court-room was turned into a scene of confusion; and the Judge, as a matter of discretion under the circumstances, directed Sheriff Kessler to take the custody of the child until further orders. ASPARAGUS BEDS .- They should receive every attention. As soon as the soil is dry enough to work, they should be spaded up, mixing in as much fine manure as possible.
